Fact Sheet

The CCLI Church Copyright Licence

Once churches began using other methods besides hymnals to share song lyrics with their congregations, the issue of copyright infringement surfaced. Reproducing copyrighted song lyrics in any form without permission violates the copyright law.

This is NOT about singing the songs. But copyright infringements do occur when a church projects or prints copyright-protected song lyrics for the congregation, photocopies song charts for the worship band, or records the worship service... without permission from the rightful song owner.

These are precisely the reasons CCLI developed the Church Copyright Licence. On behalf of the over 3,000 publishers and songwriters that CCLI represents, the Church Copyright Licence provides the necessary permission for churches to:

Enter and store song lyrics on computer for visual projection

Print songs and lyrics in song or service sheets

Record live worship services on audio or video

Make custom vocal or instrumental arrangements, if there's no published version

Translate song lyrics into another language, if there's no published version
